Double booking prevention: She logged in as patient 1 and patient 2 in different browsers and navigated to the doctor search page. She chose a doctor and navigated to their availability page to book one of the time slots. Once the appointment confirmation appeared, she switched to the other account and tried to book the same appointment, and showed the message stating that the appointment is already taken.
Patient Profile management: She entered a test patient's dashboard and clicked on "My Profile". The page that opened up had all the details of the patient including full name and phone number as required fields and other details as optional fields. She showcased the validation of the form as well as the updating feature which worked completely as expected.

Secure Patient profile: She also showed that one patient cannot access another patient's profile and when attempted, it redirects the user to the login page where the login info is required.

Managing Doctor Appointments: She logged in as a doctor and clicked on "My Appointments" where a doctor can only read their confirmed upcoming appointments. She clarified that these appointments cannot be cancelled by the doctor themselves, but through authorized administration.
